

Thomas Narowetz, MA

Thomas Narowetz works as head of Room 466 as well as project manager and researcher for the Styrian Chamber of Commerce (WKO Steiermark) and is currently involved in several national and international R&D projects. He has been working in European (educational) projects for over 12 years and is a great advocate of European co-operation and innovation. At the beginning of his professional career, he worked for two years in the private sector as a project manager in a large company. While studying sociology in Graz, he founded a social science company together with friends. After completing his master's degree in sociology, he carried out evaluations of social services for a social enterprise in Graz. At the same time, he began working in inclusive EU projects in the field of adult education and vocational training. In addition to his project work, he has been organizing and leading international training courses on digitalisation, inclusion and new forms of learning across Europe since 2013. He has been working for the Chamber since July 2019, managing several EU projects and setting up the R&D department "Room 466".
